

Please do not change the requirements for the Do Not Call list. I used to get at approximately 20 calls per day, most of them electronically generated so there would be absolutely no one there when I answered. And yet once it was detected that I had, in fact, answered the phone, the calls would continue every few minutes until a telemarketer was finally available to make a sales pitch.

This is definitely harassment. If I were to tell someone I did not want them to call me anymore, and they continued, it is harassment pure and simple. My wishes should continue to be respected.

I feel I should have the right to request that I do not receive calls such as this, and my requests should be honored. Why should someone have the ability to interrupt me continuously when I have made it clear that I do not wish to be interrupted in this manner?

Rescinding the Do Not Call List is denying me my rights. There is such a noticable difference since this Act went into effect, and any weakening of this act is denying me my rights.....
